

100 YEARS OF AUSTRALIAN AVIATION

Monday 16th November marks the Qantas centenary. That's 100 years since Australia's first commercial airline began.

All aviation workers in Australia should be celebrating this significant occasion, but instead many are struggling to survive.

Workers have been left out in the cold by the Federal Government while our vital aviation industry is on its knees.

Qantas workers in particular won't be celebrating the centenary but are instead forced to bid for their own jobs.

This is disgraceful and there is no excuse for treating the workers of our crucial industry in this way.

That's why we're holding national days of action with protests happening around the country.

If you can't attend one of the protests, here's how else you can mark this day:

SHARE A SOLIDARITY PHOTO

Use our solidarity sign (click here to download it) or create your own to take a photo of you and your family holding it, then post on social media using the hashtags #SaveQantasJobs and #SaveAviation - make sure you tag in Scott Morrison and Qantas.

If you're not on social media, you can send your pic to media@twu.com.au

SPREAD THE WORD:

www.saveqantasjobs.com.au

Please share our campaign website far and wide. We must raise the alarm about what Qantas is trying to do to protect good, secure aviation jobs. No company should be allowed to take $800m from the taxpayer then outsource its loyal workforce.

STRONGER TOGETHER

This continues to be a difficult time for all aviation workers. Remember that we're in this together. Our strong action is making a difference: this week the Senate backed aviation workers.
